1.6 Numbers

Numbers (Numerals = on'yomi)

番号 bangou	number (series of digits)
零 rei/nuru	zero
ichi/hito-	one
ni/futa-	two
= san/mi-	three
yon,shi/yo-	four
∄ go/itsu-	five
roku/mu-	six
t nana,shichi/nana-	seven
/\ hachi/ya-	eight
九 kyuu/kokono-	nine
+ juu/tou-	ten
百 hyaku	hundred
Image: sen	thousand
万 man	10,000
十万 juuman	100,000
百万 hyakuman	1 million

Numbers 1-100 are quite simple: you just append what number from 1-10 onto where it would be to say the number. For example, fifteen would be 10 \pm 5 ="juugo." Likewise, putting a number before 10 makes it a multiple of ten:"ni juu go" = twenty five.

Example sentences:

- nan sai desu ka = how old are you?
- ni juu yon sai desu = I am twenty four
- Otokono hito wa nijuuhassai desu = He is 28 years old

2.3 Saying "please"

Ways to say "please" from least to most formal:

Casual

- ください = Can be used when asking for an item kudasai (e.g. at a restaurant). Translates to "[command], please." Note how you're not actually asking, your commanding politely.
- くれます = Same as ください, except a bit wremasu more respectful. Still quite casual. It would be better to use ください because it is more common and I don't completely understand くれます

More Respectful

- くれますか = Translates to "Can you do ___, kuremasuka please?"
- もらえますか = More respectful. Also transmoraemasuka lates to "Can you do __, please?"

Most Respectful

- くださいますか = Translates to "Can you do kudasaimasuka __, please?"
- いただけますか = The most respectful. Also itadakemasuka translates to "Can you do __, please?"

See how this mimics that of the Want section, where ください < もらう < いただく. You can also see how, for example, いただけますか uses e instead of i, which is done when you are saying you can/can't do something (see Potential form).

Note that 大抵 ("in general/usually") is used when talking about concepts in general whereas よく ("often/usually") is used when talking about frequency. They can be interchanged somewhat, and the usage isn't all that strict, but you'll notice 大抵 being used in cases such as "For the most part, blah blah blah."

- 通常, 子供 は 英語 と 日本語 を 学びます tsuujou, kodomo wa eigo to nihongo o manabimasu = "Normally, children learn English and Japanese"
- 週末 はたいてい 何をしますか
 Shuumatsu wa taitei nani o shimasuka
 = "What do you usually do on weekends?"
- 私 は よく 週末 に 居酒屋 に 行きます watashi wa yoku shuumatsu ni izakaya ni ikimasu = "I often go to bars on weekends"

通常 is used in the same context as 大抵, but 通 tsuujou taitei

常 means "normally" as opposed to "usually/in general/for the most part."

4 Grammar

Examples:

4.1 Particles

A particle is a part of speech that connects parts of sentences. It doesn't usually do anything other than link words. For example, "up" in "tidy up the room" is a particle because "up" doesn't mean anything but helps convey the meaning of the sentence.

Note that sometimes particles are dropped in spoken language.

Sentence structure is quite flexible and can be formatted in multiple different ways. Usually, noun-particle combinations are followed by adjectives/verbs, which are followed by a sentence-final particle, such as ka, yo, or ne. A typical sentence is structured like:

topic time place object to verb

e.g. 私は今日図書館で日本語を勉強します Watashi wa kyou toshokan de nihongo o benkyoushimasu Similarly,

topic | frequency time | goal \ verb

e.g. 私 はよく 七時頃 うちえ 帰ります Watashi wa yoku shichijigoro uchi e kaerimasu

4.1.1 は (wa)

Serves as the topic of discussion. Can often be interchanged with by (see "wa" vs "ga"). Cannot follow question words, like dore or nani.

Examples:

- 車は私が運転しました = "As for the kuruma wa watashi ga untenshimashita car, I was the one who drove it/I drove the car"
- たなかさん は お金 を 持って います
 Tanaka-san wa okane o motte imasu
 "Tanaka has money (he is rich)"

4.1.2 が (ga)

Used to show the subject of the sentence. A more in-depth discussion is shown in "wa" vs "ga". Can also mean "but."

Examples:

- あそこ に 図書館 が あります = "There is a liasoko ni toshokan ga arimasu brary over there"
- たなかさんがお金を持っています = Tanaka-san ga okane o motte imasu "Tanaka has money (on his person right now)"
- 行ぎたくないですが、まだ行っています = ikitakunai desu ga, mada itte imasu
 "I don't want to go, but I'm still going"

4.1.3 Ø (no)

Used to connect two nouns. Very versatile because it can be used to describe attributes of objects, show ownership, and so on. no also separates parts of phone numbers. When using \mathcal{O} , the main idea comes after the qualifier. Also used for informal questions, in which case it's placed at the end of the sentence like $\rlap/$ D.

Examples:

- New York daigaku no gakusei = "A student at New York University"
- Takeshi-san no denwa bangou = "Takeshi's phone number"
- Daigaku no sensei = "College professor"
- Nihongo no gakusei = "A student who studies the Japanese language"
- Kaneki-kun no okaasan wa koukou no sensei desu = "Kaneki-kun's mother is a high school teacher"
- Kyoushitsu no naka = "Inside the classroom" (no naka = "in/inside of")
- Kono tatemono no naka ni wa ningen ga arimasen = "There are no humans in this building"

4.1.4 を (o)

Links verbs with direct objects. Placed after a direct object before the verb being done on it.

Examples:

- watashi wa koohii o nomimasu = "I drink coffee"
- ongaku o kikimasu = "I listen to music"
- terebi o mimasu = "I watch TV"

4.1.5 t (mo)

Means "too", such as "Bob, too, is hungry" or "She bought shoes, too." も replaces は, が, and を but not other particles like に.

Examples:

- ボブは 日本人です。 スーザンも 日本人です
 Bob wa nihonjin desu. Suusan mo nihonjin desu.
 "Bob is Japanese. Susan is, too."
- メアリさん は 昨日 シャツ を 買いました。
 Mary-san wa kinou shatsu o kaimashita.

靴も買いました = "Mary bought a shirt Kutsu mo kaimashita yesterday. She also bought shoes"

• トミーぐん と 私 は 先週 京都 に 行きました。 Tommy-san to watashi wa senshuu ni ikimashita.

大阪 にも 行きました。 = "Tommy and I went oosaka ni mo ikimashita." to Kyoto last week. We went to Osaka, too."

Ü

4.1.6 \(\text{to} \)

Commonly used for "and" or "together with" e.g. "I took a book (together) with me" or "I bought a book and a pen"). It is also used to quote relative clauses, i.e. talk about what someone was saying or thinking. Note that $\supset \subset$ is used to mean "about."

Examples:

With

- 私は本と鉛筆を買った = "I bought a book watashi wa hon to enpitsu o katta and a pen"
- 私 は あなた と 一緒 に 行きます = "I will go watashi wa anata to issho ni ikimasu (together) with you"

Quote

- 今日、僕は大学に行かないと思う = "I kyou, boku wa daigaku ni ikanai to omou think I will not go to college today"
- 彼はあなたに何と言ったか = "What did he kare wa anata ni nani to ittaka say to you?"

What do you think about that restaurant?

• あの レストラン って どう 思う の ano resutoran tte dou omou no

4.1.7 で (de)

Indicates:

- Where the event described by the verb takes place.
- Says what instruments are used for the verb (e.g. with chopsticks).
- Says how much something cost (e.g. I bought this for 500 yen).
- "In" or "within" when talking about time (e.g. we'll arrive in 1 hour) or scope (e.g. more than anything in the world).
- Used to mean "because of" or "due to" (e.g. I was absent because I had a cold).
- Used to say "and" for [noun and verb] sentences (e.g. I am a student and I study Japanese).

Examples:

- watashi wa toshokan de hon o yomimasu = "I read books at the library" (location)
- watashi wa uchi de terebi o mimasu = "I will watch TV at home" (location)
- 箸でご飯を食べます = "I eat my meals with hashi de gohan o tabemasu chopsticks" (instrument)
- 日本語 で話します = "I talk in Japanese" (innihongo de hanashimasu strument)
- 私はバスで駅に行きました = "I went to the watashi wa basu de eki ni ikimashita station by bus" (instrument)
- テレビ で 映画 を 見ました = "I saw a movie on terebi de eiga o mimashita TV" (instrument)
- 私は学生で日本語を勉強します = "I am watashi wa gakusei de nihongo o benkyoushimasu a student and I study Japanese" (and)
- 私は二十分で着きます = "I will arrive in 20 watashi wa nijuupun de tsukimasu minutes"

4.1.8 (C (ni)

Multiple uses including:

- The goal towards which things move
- The time an event takes place
- The recipient of an action

Not used for:

In these cases, simply drop $(\zeta$ and continue with sentence

- Regular intervals (e.g. sometimes, often, rarely)
- When using "when" (e.g. "When I go, ...")
- Time relative to the present (e.g. today, tomorrow)

• When using $\stackrel{\text{approximately}}{\begin{subarray}{c} \begin{subarray}{c} \begin{su$

Optional for:

• Talking about parts of the day (e.g. this morning, at night, this weekend)

Note the difference between \Box and \overline{C} : \overline{C} shows where something takes place (e.g. "we will run at the park") whereas \Box shows where something is headed to (e.g. "we will run to the park").

Examples with (:

- 私は今日学校に行きません = "I will not go watashi wa kyou gakkou ni ikimasen to school today" (movement)
- watashi wa uchi ni kaerimasu = "I will return home" (movement)
- gogo juuichiji ni nemasu = "I will go to bed at 11 o'clock PM" (time)
- 私 は 毎日 午前 九 時半に起きます わたし まいにちごぜんきゅうじはん お = "I get up at 9:30 AM every day"
- nichiyoubi ni Kyoto ni ikimasu = "I will go to Kyoto on Sunday" (movement + time)
- 私は友人に贈り物を与えた = "I gave my watashi wa yuujin ni okurimono o ataeta friend a gift" (recipient)
- 来月の末に京都へ行きます = "I will go to raigetsu no sue ni kyouto e ikimasu Kyoto at the end of next month"

Examples without (:

- 明日来ます = "I will come tomorrow" ashita kimasu
- 毎晩 テレビ を 見ます = "I watch TV every maiban terebi o mimasu night/evening"
- いつ 行きますか = "When will you go?"
- 午後 十一時 頃 寝ます = "I will go to bed gogo juuichiji goro nemasu around 11 o'clock PM."

Examples with optional (:

- 私は朝(に)新聞を読みます = "I read the watashi wa asa (ni) shinbun o yomimasu newspaper in the morning"
- あなた は 週末 (に) 何 を しますか = "What anata wa shuumatsu (ni) nani o shimasu ka do (or will) you do on weekends?"

4.1.9 \land (e)

Also indicates the goal of movement (like the first objective of ni). Note the pronunciation is "e," not "he."

Examples:

- watashi wa kyou gakkou e ikimasen = "I will not go to school today" (movement)
- watashi wa uchi e kaerimasu = "I will return home" (movement)

4.1.10 か (ka)

Added at the end of a sentence, this makes the sentence a question. か can be thought of as the equivalent of a question mark. Example: どうです $\mathfrak{b}=$ "How is it?"

4.1.11 ね (ne)

Added at the end of a sentence, this means "right?" like "This is cooked, right?" Also used in expressions when you imply you want some recognition (e.g. そうですね = "Is that so?").

Examples:

- Kore wa niku ja nai desu ne = "This is not meat, is it?"
- Lee san no senkou wa bungakou desu ne = "Ms. Lee, your major is literature, right?"

4.1.12 $ (yo)

Added at the end of a sentence, this means "I tell you/let me assure you," like "Mr. Smith is leaving, in case you were wondering." Also, for exclamation (like "!").

Examples:

• Tonkatsu wa sakana ja nai desu yo = "Let me assure you, 'tonkatsu' is not fish."

4.1.13 でも (demo)

The word でも usually means "but," however it can also be used as a particle. It's meaning changes depending on what it's placed after.

Noun/adjective/condition

- At (condition/adjective) (e.g. at least, at best)
 - I can read a book for at least an hour

 私は最低でも一時間本を読める

Mt. Fuji can be seen even from Tokyo ー 東京 から でも 富士山 見えます toukyou kara demo fujisan miemasu

• Or something

I'd like to drink coffee or something - コーヒー でも 飲みたい koohii demo nomitai

- How about (when making an offer)
 - How about going to a movie?
 映画 でも 見ますか
 eiga demo mimasu ka

Question/indefinite word

• ~ever (e.g. whatever, whenever)

Any time (whenever) is good

- いっでもいい
itsu demo ii

I don't care/however is good - どうでもいい dou demo ii

I will eat anything — 何 でも 食べます
nandemo tabemasu

4.2 "wa" vs "ga"

The particle ($\mathbf{z}\) actually marks the topic of discussion, not the subject. The topic is a non-grammatical concept, so it doesn't technically have an equivalent in English. The particle \(\mathbf{y}\), on the other hand, is the subject of the sentence. You should think of it such that words marked with \(\mathbf{y}\) stake their claim on a sentence and shows its ownership. While ($\mathbf{z}\) and \(\mathbf{y}\) can often be used interchangeably while still being grammatically correct, they have different meanings/implications.

The topic is essentially what is being discussed. For example, one could say Kaneki kun, shuumatsu wa taitei nani o shimasuka ("Kaneki, what do you usually do on weekends?") or Kyou wa Kyoto ni ikimasu ("I'm going to Kyoto today"). In this way, we can see that \(\daggerarrow \text{ can promote other expressions} \) (in these examples, both were time expressions) as the topic of each sentence. It's sort of like saying, for example, "Let's talk about weekends; what do you do on weekends?" or "Let me say what I will do today; I will go to Kyoto" respectively. This is an important distinction for \(\daggerarrow \text{ Likewise}, \(\daggerarrow \text{ can be used in order to direct the listener's attention, thereby inviting a comment/completion of the sentence by the listener. For example, Bangohan wa ("How about dinner?") does not stand as a subject or time (in fact, it's a direct object), but its use before a means that it is inviting the listener to respond.

The subject, on the other hand, is what is doing the action. While \(\mathbb{z}\) says what we're talking about, \(\mathcal{D}\) will pull out a particular object as being the highlight of the sentence or to show emphasis. For example, consider the sentences below:

"Who are you?"

私はデボンです

watashi wa Devon desu "Who is Devon?"

私がデボンです

watashi ga Devon desu

Note how the first sentence is a general question and requires no emphasis. The answer to the second question, however, points out that "I am Devon (not the other person)". Likewise, we could ask:

"What do you think of Japan?"

日本は面白いです (Japan is interesting)

nihon wa omoshiroi desu

"Which country is interesting?"

日本が面白いです

nihon ga omoshiroi desu

See how the second answer is implying that "it is Japan that's interesting (as opposed to elsewhere)." This is why か is used for question words, like だれか.

Further, to is often use when contrasting different things. For example, the sentence watashi wa chikoku shita would translate to "I was late" but it could have two different implications: (1) used in a discussion centered around the speaker, or (2) used when pointing out that some other person wasn't late (or it wasn't known if they were late). This seems confusing (and it is), but this is why topics are often left out of sentences if they can be. When they are included, sometimes the meaning of the speaker can be somewhat unclear.

A good example of this is to consider trying to give someone a compliment. If you were to say 目 はきれいですね (your eyes are beautiful), that me wa kirei desu ne me wa which destrict could imply that their other features were mediocre. However, if you said 目 がきれいですね instead, it me ga kirei desu ne would just be a matter-of-fact statement and there would not be any room for confusion.

が is used when comparing different things. As opposed to は, which says "A has something, but B does not," が instead says "A has something, and B may to a more/less degree." This is why が is used in the common comparison phrase A \sharp $\mathfrak B$ B $\mathfrak B$ ほう $\mathfrak B$

A yori B no hou ga ...

This difference of contrasting (\exists) and comparing (\exists)

is specifically why は has that added implication of that the opposite is true of something not mentioned in the sentence (like "I was late [but he wasn't]" or "Your eyes are beautiful [but the rest of you isn't].")

When in doubt, you can use an (imperfect) test, the removal/comma test. For example, if you can remove the noun-particle part of a sentence without losing meaning or if you can add a comma without it sounding weird, then \Box is probably the right particle. If removing the noun-particle part loses critical meaning or adding a comma makes it sound weird, you should probably use b. Again, this test isn't perfect, but it helps you get an intuition for which to use.

For example, (watashi wa/ga) kuruma o untenshimasu could have the watashi wa/ga removed and would still convey the correct meaning; likewise, watashi, kuruma o untenshimasu still makes sense, so l\(\preceq\) would likely be acceptable. However, asoko ni (toshokan wa/ga) arimasu would lose all its meaning if the pair were removed; likewise, "there a library, is" doesn't really make sense, so we use \(\psi\).

Summary

は

- Marks the topic of a sentence
- Contrasts one noun against others (that don't have the first's quality)
- Used when the noun-particle combo can be left out without losing meaning (e.g. when elaborating on things already known to the listener)
- Examples:
 - 車は私が運転しました = "As for kuruma wa watashi ga untenshimashita the car, I was the one who drove it/I drove the car"
 - たなかさん は お金 を 持って います = Tanaka-san wa okane o motte imasu "Tanaka has money (he is rich)"
 - 予定 は ありますか = "Do you have any yotei wa arimasu ka plans?"

が

- Marks the subject of a sentence
- Compares multiple nouns that may or may not all have the same qualities
- Used to bring one noun in particular out from a group or add emphasis on the subject; separates/calls out one noun from others
- Used when the noun-particle combo cannot be left out without losing meaning (e.g. when answering "who drove the car?")
- Used when adding new things/information to a conversation about a topic or when making a series of unrelated statements

- Used when describing things with adjectives or when using question words
- Marks objects of potential-form verbs (such as "can [verb]" or "able to [verb]")
- Connects clauses with a meaning of "but" or "despite"
- Examples:

There is a library over there
- あそこ に 図書館 が あります
asoko ni toshokan ga arimasu

Tanaka has money (on his person right now)

たなかさんがお金を持っています
 Tanaka-san ga okane o motte imasu

Do you have a plan?

- 予定 が ありますか yotei ga arimasu ka

When I was a child, I liked tempura more than sushi

- 子供 の 時、 寿司 より 天ふら の ほう が 好き だ kodomo no toki, sushi yori tempura no hou ga suki datta

4.3 And

"And" is somewhat tricky in Japanese because there is no single word to use. Rather, it depends on sentence structure:

Particles for and

Noun + noun	٤
$\operatorname{Verb} + \operatorname{verb}$	~-te form of first verb Second verb's tense defines first verb's tense
Adjective + adjective	~-te form of first adjective
Noun + verb	で
[Sentence]. And then, [sentence]	それから

Examples:

- 私は本と鉛筆を買った = "I bought a book watashi wa hon to enpitsu o katta and a pen"
- 私はあなたと一緒に行きます = "I will go watashi wa anata to issho ni ikimasu (together) with you"
- 私 は 晩御飯 を 食べて テレビ を 見ました = watashi wa bangohan o tabete terebi o mimashita "I ate dinner and watched TV"
- 私の犬は可愛いくて小さいです = "My dog watashi no inu wa kawaikute chiisai desu is cute and small"
- 私は学生で日本語を勉強します = "I am watashi wa gakusei de nihongo o benkyoushimasu a student and I am studying Japanese"
- 我々は東京に行きました。 wareware wa Toukyou ni ikimashita.

Then, we went to Kyoto それから、 京都 に 行きました。 Sorekara, Kyouto ni ikimashita

4.4 Invitations

Invitations are formed using the negative present conjugation of a verb along with a question ending, i.e. -masenka. For example, to invite someone to lunch, you would say Hirugohan o tabemasenka = "Would you like to get lunch?" You would not use -masuka because that just becomes a question: Hirugohan o tabemasuka = "Do you eat lunch?"

4.5 Negations

There are many ways to do sentence negations, i.e. saying something is not the case. ja nai desu is the most colloquial. Ja is actually a contraction of de wa, and the phrase nai desu can be formally replaced with masen or arimasen.

When negating a sentence of the form X wa Y desu, where X and Y are nouns, we can replace desu with ja nai desu. For example,

Yamada san wa gakusei ja nai desu ="Mr. Yamada is not a student."

The varying levels of formality mean that this sentence can also be written/spoken as:

Yamada san wa gakusei ja arimasen (more conservative speech style)

Yamada san wa gakusei de wa arimasen (formal, appropriate for writing)

Note that this does not work for adjectives, thus we cannot say Oishii ja nai desu when trying to say "That was not delicious." Instead, we say Oishii nai desu (will be described in more detail later). Examples:

- Takeshi-san wa amari benkyoushimasen = "Takeshi doesn't study much"
- Watashi wa zenzen terebi o mimasen = "I never watch TV/I do not watch TV at all"

	what (e.g. kore wa nan desuka)
	nan is used before desu or a
nan/nani	"counter", such as ji .
nan/nam	nani is used before a particle
どれ	which (one)
どの	which
ت ناح	where
だれ	who
だれの	whose
何故 / なんで	why (first is "what reason")
naze
どう	how/why/what (depends on context)
どうですか	how is it
どうして	what happened
何と	how
いつ	when
いくら	how much
いくつ	how many
どのぐらい	how long
どんな	what kind of

Adding a particle to the end of a question word converts it to a new word that answers the question with a particular amount. For the most part, the following particles have respective effects:

- t all
- か some
- でも any

Some question words with particles

		always (cannot mean "never")
いつ	も	To say never, use the past tense
		with $\exists \xi$ (see examples)
いつ	か	someday/sometime
いつ	でも	whenever
何	も	nothing (isn't used for "everything")
何	か	something
何	でも	anything
誰	も	everybody
誰	か	somebody
誰	でも	anybody
いくつ	も	several
いくつ	か	some number of things
いくつ	でも	any number of things

Examples:

How much is this?

これは いくら ですか Kore wa ikura desu ka

How much is this watch?

• この 時計 は いくら ですか Kono tokei wa ikura desu ka

That watch is 3,500 yer

その 時計 は 三千五百 円 です Sono tokei wa sanzengohyaku en desu

Which one is your bag?

- どれ が あなた の カバン ですか Dore ga anata no kaban desu ka
- Which bag is yours? Dono kaban ga anata no desu ka

Which bag is this?

• これは どの カバン ですか Kore wa dono kaban desu ka

Whose bag is this?

• これはだれのカバンですか Kore wa dare no kaban desu ka

That is Susan's bag

それは スーサンの カバン です Sore wa Suusan no kaban desu

What is your phone number?

電話 番号 は 何 ですか (Anata no) denwa bangou wa nan desu ka

Excuse me. What time is it right now?

すみません、 今 何時 ですか Sumimasen. Ima nanji desuka

It is 8:30 AM. 午前 八時半 です gozen hachiji han desu

• 日本 に 行った こと が ありますか nihon ni itta koto ga arimasuka

I have never been to Japan

- 日本に 行ったことがない nihon ni itta koto ga nai
- どのぐらい やってるの = "How long have you been doing it for?"
- どうです か = "How is it?"
- どうでした か = "How was it?"
- どうやって = "How do you do it?"
- どうした = "What happened?"
- これでどうかな = "How about this/how is this?"
- 話すてどういう意味ですか = What does hanasu te dou iu imi desu ka "話す" mean?
 - "To speak"という意味です = "It means to "To speak" to iu imi desu
- どういうこと = "What do you mean/what is dou iu koto this/what is going on?"

• 彼らの事をどうと思いましたか = "Wha karera no koto o dou to omoimashitaka did you think of them?"

4.6.1 When

There are multiple words for "when" depending on the situation, described below.

When

itsu	Only for questions
toki	Specifying when something took place

For toki, the format is "<clause 1> toki, <clause 2>." The first clause should always be the when clause; this means that the following two sentences are equivalent: "I ate a lot when I was in Japan" == "When I was in Japan, I ate a lot".

Also, you cannot use either desu or the masu conjugation of a verb in the first clause.

Finally, since toki is a noun, use no to connect it to other nouns.

You don't have to change clause 1 to be in the past tense if you don't want to, but if you want to, you can using datta. Doing so, you will need to drop the no.

Examples:

itsu

- いつ 日本 に 来ますか = "When will you come Itsu nihon ni kimasuka to Japan?"
- いつ 日本語 を 勉強し 始めた の = "When did Itsu nihongo o benkyoushi hajimeta no you start learning Japanese?"
- じゃあ, いつがいい = "Then, when is good for Jaa, itsu ga ii you?"
- いつから 働きますか = "When do/will you itsu kara hatarakimasu ka start work?"
- いつまで日本にいるの = "How long/until itsu made nihon ni iru no when will you be in Japan?"

toki

- 雨のとき、よくうちで本を読みます = Ame no toki, yoku uchi de hon o yomimasu "When it rains, I often read books at home"
- 私 は あまり 映画 を 見ません = "I don't see Watashi wa amari eiga o mimasen many movies."
- 映画 を見るのとき、よく午後 頃見ます = Eiga o miru no toki yoku gogo goro mimasu "When I watch movies, I usually go around the afternoon."
- 高い じやあ ない です. 安い です よ = "It's not Takai jaa nai desu. Yasui desu yo. expensive. It's cheap!"

4.7 Comparisons

 $$ $\mathcal{L}$ means "more than" and is often used in comparisons. The position of the things being compared is opposite of that in English; e.g. "A is more _ than B" \rightarrow "B $\mathcal{L}$ \mathcal{D}$ A \quad ".

Examples:

It is better to leave than to stay

- 滞在するよりも 出発する方 が マシ だtaizai-suru yori mo shuppatsu-suru kata ga mashi da
- It was faster than I thought それは思ったより早い
 sore wa omotta yori hayai

You are more of a problem than that • それより問題はお前だよ
sore yori mondai ha omae da yo

4.8 If

There are a few ways to say "if." Essentially, they all follow the format:

"CONDITIONAL + particle + RESULT" but the particle changes based on the context of the sentence and the conditional:

- たら Constant and hypothetical situations but not contextual, and particularly good for making statements (e.g. if it's not being talked about, you could say "if you drop the ball, it will fall" or "if you go to Japan, I will join you"). Is used for requests, recommendations, prohibition, order, or when the result depends on the completion of the conditional, and is kind of like saying when as well ("When it stops raining, let's go jogging"). Has a sense of looking to the past (use of ~た), which is why it could possibly be translated to "when."
 - たら uses the past tense of the verb, e.g. 食べたら
- なら Contextual hypothetical situations (e.g. if someone is talking about going to Japan, you can say "If you go to Japan, I will join you"). Also, as たら is more past-looking, you could use なら to show decisions, judgements, and opinions. It cannot be used for requests, recommendations, etc. (the things that たら is used for).
 - なら uses the plain tense of the verb, e.g. 食べるなら
- と Can replace either たら or なら; used for natural occurrences/constant results (e.g. if you drop the ball, it will fall).
 - なら uses the plain tense of the verb, e.g. 食べると

• If - Can replace either たら or なら, but can only be used in hypothetical situations, not constant situations since you'd use と instead. Tends to be used to emphasize the conditional part of the sentence instead of the resulting part (e.g. "IF my friend goes, then I will go, too") or to make a suggestion (e.g. "what if we tried it this way"). Technically, there are some other rules with は but they get somewhat complicated (e.g. if the conditional and result both have the same subject, you can't use this).

verb conjugations

Verbs	Change the u to e
来る	*れば
kuru	kureba
n-adjectives	Replace final い with ければ
ない negatives	Teplace mai V. with 171 ha
楽しい	楽しければ
死にたくない	死にたくなければ
Nouns	Add であれば
な-adjectives	Aud (W) Nd
元気	元気であれば

Summary

- ・たら and なら tend to be the anchors of if and can be replaced with ば or と depending on the specific situation
- たら has the fewest restrictions, followed by ば and なら
- It is used for recommendations, so it may come across as you telling someone to do something
- As a simple base to use while learning initially, try to use たら in all situations except contextual, in which case use なら. However, it's clear that they overlap in a lot of areas, so you'll just have to listen a lot to find out the common usages.

Summary

	Constant	Hypoth.	One-time	Contextual
٤	X
ば		X	X	X
たら	X	X	X
なら	X	X		X

One last note: \(\bullet\) means "if by any chance" and is a supplementary addition to a sentence. It can't be used for constant expressions and is added to the very beginning of the sentence. Examples:

たら

If it's ok/you don't mind, would you like to meet again?

• もしよかったらまた会いませんか (could moshi yokattara mata aimasen ka also be 会わない の)

When you go to Japan, would you please buy a souvenir

- 日本 に 行ったら、 お土産 を 買って ください nihon ni ittara, odosan o katte kudasai
 - Note: request, so use たら

I will be happy if I can go

• 行けたら、嬉しい になります - Note: use of iketara, ureshii ni narimasu can/able to なら

If you drink alcohol, then please don't drive

• 酒 を飲むなら、運転しないでください sake o nomunara, untenshinaide kudasai

If I were rich, I'd buy a car

• 私 が 金持ち なら、 車 を 買います - Could be watashi ga kanemochi nara, kuruma o kaimasu either なら or たら using 金持ち だったら

If you drink this before drinking alcohol,

• 酒を飲む前にこれを飲むなら、sake o nomu mae ni kore o nomu nara,
you'll feel better tomorrow

明日気分が良くなるです

ashita kibun ga yoku naru desu

What are you if you aren't a tool?

• 道具 じゃないなら何だというだの douga ja nai nara nanda to ju da no

ば

If you go by taxi, you could make the 6 o'clock train

 タクシーで行けば、6時の電車に乗れるでしょう takushii de ikeba, rokouji no densha ni noreru deshou

I will go shopping if I can meet with my friend

• 友達 に 会えれば、 買い物 に 行きます - Note: tomodachi ni aereba, kaimono ni ikimasu could also use たら

How can I become stronger?

• どうすればより強くなれるか - Note how dou sureba yori tsuyoku nareru ka this uses the comparison work より described in the previous section

If you win,

 そちが勝てば、 sochi ga kate ba,

I will give you whatever you ask

そち の 望む もの 何でも 与えよう sochi no nozomu mono nandemo ataeyou

• 本当であれば、奴が下へ降りた理由は hontou deareba, yatsu ga shita he orita riyuu wa so he could kill me down there

下で俺に殺すためです shita de ore ni korosu tame desu Should I leave?
・ 今から行けばいいのかima kara ikeba ii no ka

• 死にたくなければ、逃げて shinitakuna-kereba, nigete

4.9 Word specifics

4.9.1 Movement: iku vs kuru

The Japanese words for "come" (kuru) and "go" (iku) function slightly differently than in english. In english, "come" and "go" are in reference to the topic at hand (e.g. person A might say "come here" and person B would say "I'm coming"). In Japanese, these words are always in reference to the speaker; this means that most of the time, these words function the same as in english ("Come to my party" uses kuru and "Go to John's party" uses iku). However, they function differently when there is a conversation about coming to the person speaking: if A says "come here", then B says "I'm going". Thus, the words always function in reference to the speaker, not the listener. When A speaks, B is going to A; when B speaks, B is going to A. Thus,

A: 来てください (kite kudasai) = "Please come" き B: 行きます (ikimasu) = "I'm coming"

4.9.2 A little: chotto

The Japanese word chotto literally means "little/a bit/a small amount," e.g. chotto kudasai ("please give me a little") and chotto matte kudasai ("please wait for a moment"). Chotto is commonly used for a polite refusal, where it would translate to "inconvenient/impossible/whatever." In Japanese, people don't usually refuse with iie because it sounds too direct.

Examples:

- doyoubi ni eiga o mimasenka = "Do you want to see a movie on Saturday?"
- doyoubi, chotto = "Saturday is not convenient for me"

4.9.3 Formality: go-/o- prefixes

It is common to add an extra お or こ before a word, e.g. kaasan would be mother, but okaasan is common to hear. The extra "go/o" is to make the word more formal. For example, お待って (omatte) would be said to make the request to "wait" more formal, as opposed to just saying $\sharp \supset \tau$ (matte).

Depending on the word, "go" or "o" will be used. Examples:

- お名前 は 何ですか = "What is your name? (poonamae wa nan desu ka lite)"
- ご出身 は どちら ですか = "Where are you gosusshin wa dochira desu ka from?"

4.9.4 Until: made

まで is the word used when trying to say until, by, or made before. It is used commonly to say "We are open until5" or "Please come in before 3." Examples:

- 今日 は 何時 までですか =
 kyou wa nanji made desu ka
 "When do you close? (lit. Until when do you exist?)"
- 大時までです =
 rokuji made desu
 "We are open until 6 (lit. until 6)"
- でも, 五時半 までに 来てください = demo, goji han made ni kite kudasai "However, please come before 5:30 (lit. However, please come in until 5:30)"

4.9.5 For (the purpose of): you

table is used to say something is for someone; use the particle \mathcal{O} to say who/what the purpose is. There are other times table is used outside of for people, but it is unclear what exactly at this time.

用/よう is used to say phrases that point to the purpose/reason for doing something. This includes things like "be careful (for the purpose of) that you don't get sick" and "that (for this purpose) is how you use it" (see examples below)

Examples:

ため

■ bought this for you
■ あなた の ため に これ を 買った
anata no tame ni kore o katta

■ Fon ためには僕準備の時間がほしい sono tame ni wa, boku junbi no jikan ga hoshii

よう

Seat for two people, please

• 二人用の席をください futa-ri you no seki o kudasai I try not to think about it

- 僕は考えないようにしている lit. I am doboku wa kangaenai you ni shite iru ing for the purpose of not thinking You use it that way/that's how you use it
- そのように使うんですね lit. you use it for sono you ni tsukau-n desu ne that purpose

Be careful not to get heat stroke

- 熱中症に ならない ように 気を付けて netsuchuushou ni naranai you ni ki o tsukete The next day, she made breakfast as usual/every day
- 次 の 日、 彼女 は いつも と 同じ よう に tsugi no hi, kanojo wa itsumo to onaji you ni 朝ご飯 を 作りました asagohan o tsukurimashita

4.9.6 Thing/Concept: koto

事 is a generic noun that is an "abstract thing" koto and is often used to turn words before it into a substantive clause, i.e. nouns. For example, instead of saying you read books, you could instead talk about the action of reading books:

It is fun to read books I read books 本 を 読みます → 本 を 読む 事 は 楽しい です. hon o yomu koto wa tanoshii desu hon o yomimasu

This is often used with "is able to" or "can." For example, 本 を 読めます is equivalent to saying hon o vomemasu

本 を 読む 事 が できます (see Potential form). hon o yomu koto ga dekimasu

Otherwise, 事 is used to mean a variety of words under the umbrella of "thing/concept." Examples:

- There was something I wanted to ask -つ 聞きたい 事 が あった Note how 事 is hitotsu kikitai koto ga atta used in how they say "something" instead of 何 か, lit. like saying "1 wanted-to-ask thing existed" which may tie into the Japanese cultural way of being indirect with what you want What do you mean/is the meaning of this
- どう いうこと dou iu koto

It seems like that's the case (lit. it is becoming such a thing)

- そういう事になっています sou iu koto ni natte imasu I don't care about the bread anymore
- パンのことはもういいんだ here, it's used pan no koto wa mou iinda to mean "the (this particular one)" (without it, the sentence would say "I don't care about bread (in general)")

That's unheard of/never heard of it

聞いた こと が ない kiita koto ga nai

Have you ever been to Japan?

- 日本に 行ったことが ありますか nihon ni itta koto ga arimasuka
- Did you come here just to say that?

 そんな 事 を 言う ため に ここ に 来た のか sonna koto o iu tame ni koko ni kita no ka If so, it was a wasted/useless trip
- だとしたら 無駄な 旅 だった よ datoshitara mudana tabi datta yo

I wonder: kana 4.9.7

かな is used to show uncertainty, wondering, or otherwise not complete faith in what you're saying. It's used in cases where you say something like "(That sounds like a cool restaurant.) Maybe I should go there sometime." It is used in casual settings, not really in formal situations. Examples:

- 明日 雪 が 降る かな = "I wonder if it will snow ashita yuki ga furu kana tomorrow"
- これいくらかな = "I wonder how much this is" kore ikura kana
- 音楽をやってみろかな = "I guess I'll try out muongaku o yatte miro kana sic"
- 音楽をやってみろかなと思って = "I thought ongaku o yatte miro kana to omotte that I should try out music"

Because: kara/node4.9.8

To say "because," use the format: "CAUSE + {BE-CAUSE} + EFFECT" where BECAUSE = から/の で. Often, a comma is placed after the BECAUSE word to further show separation.

Generally, から focuses more on the cause and の で focuses more on the effect. Less importantly, ので is used for factual/non-opinion-based things, whereas から is used for concepts based on personal opinion/suggestion/intention/speculation/request. Examples:

- 明日 テスト が ある ので 今夜 勉強しなきゃ = ashita testo ga aru node konya benkyoushinakya "I have to study tonight because I have a test tomorrow'
- 明日 仕事 に 行かなくちゃ から、早く 寝なくちゃ ashita shigoto ni ikanakucha kara, hayaku nenakucha = "I have to go to sleep early because I have to go to work tomorrow'
- 暑い ので 気 を 付けて = "Be careful/take care atsui node ki o tsukete because it is hot"
- この 二人 が いた から 助けった んだ = "Bekono futari ga ita kara tasuketta nda cause these two people were there, I was able to save you"

4.9.9 To do: suru vs yaru

Both する and やる mean "to do," but they are used in different situations:

する

∼する verbs

I think I'll pick this one

- Choosing items これ を する と 思う kore o suru to omou
- Wearing accessories
- Talking formally

There is a weird smell

• When talking about senses - 変な 匂い が する henna nioi ga suru

やる

- Doing a physical action (in this case, する and やる are interchangeable) - ゲーム を やる
- When describing feelings
- When expressing joy or pride やった!
- When giving to someone/something you look down on (like an animal)

4.9.10 Emphasis/Joking: なんて

The word なんて is used for two purposes: to emphasize the content of the sentence (usually the content placed before it) and to say just kidding. Emphasizing the content can be used to show a strengthened opinion, an exclamatory sentence, surprise, disappointment, excitement, etc. depending on the context. If used while quoting someone else, it's common to put だ before なんて.

Examples:

 Hyve never heard of Tanaka sensei
 田中 先生 なんて 聞いた こと ない tanaka sensei nante kiita koto nai

I've never heard of a teacher such as Tanaka sensei

● 田中 先生 なんて 先生 は 聞いた こと ない tanaka sensei nante sensei wa kiita koto nai

4.9.11Way/method: 通 vs 道

道 mean "street, way" but they michi/dou too/-tsuu

are used in different contexts. Both can be used interchangeably for the physical "street, road, etc." but they differ when used for conceptual things.

通 tends to be used for way or as, such as "as I thought" or "as I was saying." 通 also seems to be a way of saying $\exists \succeq$ with verbs to say "that which" since $\exists \ \succeq$ would turn the verb into a gerund (e.g.

望む 通り). On the other hand, 道 tends to be more nozomu toori like method or teachings such as "the way of the samurai" or "the method of writing" or "the proper way to write."

Examples:

That's right/that way

その通りです sono toori desu Just as I thought

• 私 の 思った 通り だ watashi no omotta toori da Please do as I say

• 私の言う通りにしてください

5 Verbs

5.1 Overview

There are many types of verbs and conjugations in Japanese. There are "ru"-verbs, "u"-verbs, and irregular verbs. For every verb, there's a base and a suffix. For example, taberu has the base tabe and suffix ru (it is a "ru" verb). Each verb base is used as a stem such that conjugations are appended after the base (e.g. $tabe\underline{te}$ and $tabe\underline{masu}$). Note: verb stems are often written using the tilde, " \sim " thought this isn't the only use of the tilde.

Note that a key difference between "ru" and "u" verbs is that "ru" verb stems are just the base (verb - "ru") whereas "u" verb stems are the base plus "i" (verb - "u" + "i"). i.e.

"verbru" \rightarrow "verbmase"

"verbu" \rightarrow "verbimasu"

Example verbs

	ru-verb	u-verb
dictionary	taberu (eat)	iku (to go)
base	tabe	ik
stems	tabe	iki
present (affirmative)	tabemasu	ikimasu
present (negative)	tabemasen	ikimasen

Conjugations depend on the tense in which the verb is used. For example, there is the dictionary form, which is used when talking about the word and occasionally in sentences (we can treat this like the unconjugated form of a verb). There is a present tense (affirmative), which can also be used as the future tense. There is a present tense (negative), to say you're not doing something. The negative tense is often ended using masen but can sometimes be ended using verb nai desu. Most conjugations remain within the same letter category (e.g. iku only uses "k" syllables and never uses consonants other than "k").

Note that just because a verb ends in "ru" or "u" doesn't mean it is a "ru/u" verb; for example, kaeru is a "u"-verb whose base is kaer and present form is kaerimasu. Thus, you need to remember which are "ru" and "u" verbs.

Trick: with the exception of irregular verbs, if a verb has an "a", "u", or "o" right before the final ru, it's definitely a "u"-verb. If a verb ends in "i" or "e" right before the final ru, it's likely (though not guaranteed) to be a "ru"-verb. An example exception: kaeru is a "u"-verb.

There are also 2 irregular verbs that have odd effects, such as changing the vowel (e.g. in kuru, we replace the "u" in "ku" with "i") upon conjugation (see the table). Other words can be converted into a verb by adding する at the end (so technically more than 2 irregular verbs, but only 2 conjugations you need to remember).

Example irregular verbs

	(to do)	(to come)
dictionary	suru	kuru
stems	shi	ki
present (affirmative)	shimasu	kimasu
present (negative)	shimasen	kimasen

5.2 Tenses

5.2.1 Plain form/Simple present

The plain form (A.K.A. simple present) is used to mean either (1) a person regularly/habitually engages in the activity, or (2) a person will/plans to perform the activity in the future.

As briefly covered in Overview, the formal conjugation of a plain form/simple present tense of a verb is ます or います for る and う verbs, respectively. masu imasu The informal conjugation is simply the verb as-is, so no conjugation.

Simple Present Conjugations

	Formal	Informal
る	ます	る
う	います	う

Examples include:

- 私 は よく テレビ を 見ます = "I often watch watashi wa yoku terebi o mimasu television"
- 私 は ときどき 朝ご飯 を 食べません = "I watashi wa tokidoki asagohan o tabemasen sometimes don't eat breakfast"
- 私 は あした 京都 に 行きます = "I will go to watashi wa ashita Kyoto ni ikimasu Kyoto tomorrow"
- 私は今日うちに帰りません = "I will not rewatashi wa kyou uchi ni kaerimasen turn home today"

5.2.2 Past tense

The past tense says something did/didn't happen in the past (e.g. I ate yesterday). Note that the -ta form requires the same verb-ending changes as the -te form (see -te form). This also works for adjectives (see the examples below).

desu

	Affirmative	Negative
present tense	∼です	~じゃないです
past tense	~でした	~じゃなかったです

The past tense of verbs (as opposed to です) follow a similar pattern:

Verbs

	Affirmative	Negative
present tense	~ます	~ません
past tense	~ました	~ませんでした
(colloquial past)	~た	~なかったです

Examples:

- あれ は 日本 の 映画 じゃなかったです = are wa nihon no eiga janakattadesu "That was not a Japanese movie"
- メアリーさん は 午後 九時 頃 うち に 帰りました Mearii-san wa gogo kyuuji goro uchi ni kaerimashita = "Mary came back home around 9 PM"
- 私 は 昨日 日本語 を 勉強しませんでした = "I Watashi wa kinou nihongo o benkyoushimasendeshita did not study Japanese yesterday"
- トミーくんと 私 は 先週 お寺 に 行きました Tomii-kun to watashi wa senshuu otera ni ikimashita = "Tommy and I went to a temple last week"
- 我々は十時に帰らなかったです = "We did Wareware wa juuji ni kaeranakattadesu not return at 10 (colloquial)"
- 忙しかった = "I have been busy"

5.2.3 -te form

The -te form of verbs are very common and used in multiple different situations. The -te form is tenseless, in that it isn't present, past, or future, however, it can be used in all three situations. Cases where it is used include:

- Requests/commands:
 - $\sim \tau = \text{command}$
 - $\sim \tau$ ください = request (do this please)
 - $\sim \tau$ くれますか = more formal question for superiors (would you please do this)
- Connecting two verb phrases with "and" (see And)
- For saying "after __-ing, ..." To do so, use ~てから
- Expressing that something is happening currently
- Asking permission to do something
- Used with 見る to mean "to try"

• Lots of other expressions (too detailed for right now), often which include some type of variation of two verbs together (e.g. バスに乗って行きます)
basu ni notte ikimasu

The verb-ending changes are listed below. Note that -ru verbs are always easy and -u verbs with different consonant endings are the main ones that change. The past tense -ta form is also made with these verbending changes.

Verb-ending changes

suru verbs	shite
kuru	kite
-ru verbs	~te
vowel + u
tsu	\sim tte
ru mu
nu	\sim nde
bu
ku	~ite
gu	~ide
su	~shite
行く	行って
iku

Examples:

- 助けてください = "Please help" tasukete kudasai
- 朝ごはんを食べて、家を出ました = "I ate asagohan o tabete, ie o demashita breakfast and left the house"
- 卵を食べてから、うちに帰りました = "Aftamago o tabete kara, uchi ni kaerimashita ter eating eggs, I returned home."
- 飲んでいます = "I am drinking" nonde imasu
- 本を読んでもいいですか="Is it ok if I read hon o yonde mo ii desu ka a book?"
- 猫 を 助けて みます = "I will try to help the cat" neko o tasukete mimasu

In order to make the negative -te form, you just add de to the end of the nai form of the verb.

Being direct/slightly harsh

If trying to be direct/slightly harsh/rude (e.g. being mad at someone) when telling someone to do something, rather than use the -te form, you'd use a form that's kind of a mix between -te and should/let's.

Conjugations

~ru	∼ro
~u	~e
食べる	食べろ
行く	行け
待つ	待て
痛い (hurts)	痛てえ (ouch!)

5.2.4 Casual negative form (nai)

While $\sharp \, \forall \lambda$ is the formal negative form of a verb, \sharp ι is the casual negative form. It follows the following format:

Nai form

Verb	Form
Ru-verbs	~る→ない
U-verbs	~(u→a)ない
Vowel+u	~(u→wa)ない
する	しない
くる	こない
ある	ない

5.2.5 Potential form

The potential form says that someone "is able" or "can" do something, such as (e.g. I can eat). To do this, you simply change the verb a bit, you don't have to conjugate it differently:

Potential form

ru-verbs	~られる
u-verbs	~(u→e)る
する	~できる
来る	~こられる

This means that all verbs become ru-verbs. Note that for u-verbs, the final u becomes an e, e.g. $\sharp \zeta$ becomes $\sharp t \zeta \delta$.

When using the potential form, you $\underline{\mathbf{don't}}$ use the direct object particle, $\overleftarrow{\mathbf{z}}$. Instead, use \exists or \flat \mathbf{s} .

Another way to use the potential form is to use $unconjugated\ verb +$ こと+ができる

Note how こと is used instead of 事. This means that there are two ways to say "can/can't" (with example of eating):

食べる こと が できます and 食べられます.
taberu koto ga dekimasu taberaremasu

Examples:

- 私は読めます = "I can read books" watashi wa yomemasu
- 今日 は 食べられません = "I can't eat today" kyou wa taberaremasen

- 友達のおかげ、私は映画を見ることができた tomodachi no okage, watashi wa eiga o miru koto ga dekita
 "Thanks to my friend, I was able to see the movie"
- 友達 の おかげ、私 は 映画 を 見られます tomodachi no okage, watashi wa eiga o miraremasu (same as above)
- 私は話すことができます、
 watashi wa hanasu koto ga dekimasu, でも聞くことができません = "I can speak
 demo kiku koto ga dekimasen
 but can't listen"
- 私は話せます、でも聞けません = (same as watashi wa hanasemasu, demo kikemasen above)
- 自分 に できる こと を やる = "Do what you jibun ni dekiru koto o yaru can do"

5.2.6 Want

When describing what someone wants or wants to do, there are a whole bunch of ways to express it and a whole bunch of small technicalities for how to express that.

When wanting nouns

When talking about yourself, you say "<object> ga hoshii desu." Note the usage of "ga" instead of "o." Example: 私はお金が飲しいです = "I want watashi wa okane ga hoshii desu money." In informal settings, you can drop the desu.

When wanting to do something (verb)

When talking about yourself, you use "~tai desu" where ~= verb stem. Example: 私はその本を読みたいです = "I want to watashi wa sono hono o yomitai desu read that book." Alternatively, you can use "ga" instead of "o" to emphasize the subject (object? not sure). Again, in informal settings, you can drop the desu.

When to use \sim tai

"~tai" is actually quite personal, so it can only be used for yourself and in question to a second person. Do not use it in question to a superior. Example: 何 が 食べたい です か = "What do you want to Nani ga tabetai desu ka eat?"

Third person

When talking about what someone in the third person wants, we use a similar method as what was used for yourself. The difference is that you write "hoshiigatte imasu" for objects and "~tagatte imasu" for verbs. Unlike when talking about yourself, you only use "o" for objects, never "ga." Examples:

私 の お兄さん は この 映画 を 見たがって います watashi no oniisan wa kono eiga o mitagatte imasu = "My older brother wants to see this movie."
トミーくん は お金 を 欲しいがって います = Tommy-kun wa okane o hoshiigatte imasu "Tommy wants money"

When wanting someone to do something for you To express a desire for someone to do something, the verb will be "~te hoshii desu" and the other person is marked with "ni". Example: これを彼に届けて欲しいですか = "Do you kore o kare ni todokete hoshii desu ka want me to deliver this to him?"

In the same way, we could use the verb 貰う/もらう (to get) to ask to receive something. To do this, we use "~te moraitai desu." Example: 洋子に 運転して もらいたい です = "I want Yoko Yoko ni untenshite moraitai desu to drive."

When wanting a superior to do something for you Same as "morau" except use "itadaku" in the form "itadakitai" Example: 田中先生に 来て いただきたい です = "I want Tanaka-sensei ni kite itadakitai desu professor Tanaka to come."

Negative form of want

To say you/someone doesn't want something, add ζ after $\exists \xi \cup \exists \xi$. Examples:

犬が飲しくないです

inu ga hoshikunai desu Tommy didn't want to drink beer

トミイくん は ビール を 飲みたくなかった. Tommy-kun wa biiru o nomitakunakatta

I don't want to eat alone

一人 で 食べたくない

Past tense

The past tense is pretty much the same as standard past tense: use ~かった for past positive and ~なかった for past negative, e.g. 話したかった. hanashitakatta

5.2.7 Must

There are lots of ways to say you must/need to do something. They come from a round-about way of saying must: "it would be bad if I didn't do it." The base form is ~なくて は いけません which is like saying "(neg. verb) at can not do it." More specifically, it follows the form:

ending = choice of だめ/いけない/ならない

- Negative te-form + 14 + ending
- Negative verb + と/ば + ending

However, this isn't generally used except in really formal situations, so some kind of abbreviation is used more often. This abbreviation is made by dropping the い in the ない form and adding either きゃ or く ちゃ. You may also mix the abbreviation with いけ ない to show emphasis. There is no abbreviation for the past tense.

Examples:

• 毎日 学校 に 行かない と だめ です mainichi gakkou ni ikanai to dame desu

毎日 学校 に いかなきゃ mainichi gakkou ni ikanakya

- 宿題 を しなくて は いけなかった = "I had to shukudai o shinakute wa ikenakatta do my homework"
- 明日 仕事 に 行かなくちゃ から、 早く 寝なくちゃ ashita shigoto ni ikanakucha kara, hayaku nenakucha = "I have to go to sleep early because I have to go to work tomorrow"
- 色々 しなきゃ いけないん だ よ ね = "I have a iroiro shinakya ikenai-ndayone lot of/various things to do"

5.2.8Should/Let's

In English, "should" and "must" are basically the same thing. In Japanese, however, "should" is weaker than "must" and has slightly different meanings depending on how it's used:

- Let's
- Hedging your bets on if an action would be beneficial or not
- Would/probably/hopefully (when used with で
- To soften a question (in place of ね)

Examples:

Let's go ● 行きましょう ikimashou

Maybe I should go see that movie, too? ● 私 も その 映画 を 見よう かな?

watashi mo sono eiga o miyou kana?

It would (probably) be more convenient if I rode with you

あなた と 一緒 に 乗って 方 が 都合 だろう anata to issho ni notte hou ga tsugou darou

You're going to the party, too, right? ● 君 も パーティー に 行く だろう? kimi mo paatii ni iku darou?

Is he nervous? 彼は 緊張して いるの だろうか kare wa kinchou shite iru no darou ka

5.3 Imasu/Arimasu vs Desu

Desu is a form of "to be," meaning that it is used when it is saying that "[something] is [something]"; like "the cat is black" or "I like cheese" or "I am happy." Imasu/arimasu are meant to say something is in existence, like "the cat is there" or "there is plenty of cheese" or "do you have a green shirt?" Additionally, arimasu can be used to show ownership. For example, テレビがあります = "There is a TV/I have a terebi ga arimasu

TV" whereas テレビです = "It is a TV." terebi desu

Note the other subtle differences between arimasu and desu:

- When talking about a location, あります uses the particle (ζ instead of ζ which is used for ζ
- When talking about a location, the place description usually comes at the beginning of the sen-
- When using あります, you use が instead of は for the subject/thing description. Example: あそこ に テレビ が あります = "There is a TV asoko ni terebi ga arimasu over there" (note the particle (\(\tau \) to describe location).

5.4 Imasu vs Arimasu

Imasu is usually used for living things while arimasu is for non-living things. Exceptions/edge-cases include dead bodies (arimasu), robots (imasu), and plants (arimasu). Sometimes, arimasu also shows possession, e.g. $Shukudai\ ga\ arimasu$ = "There is/I have homework."

5.6 Verb Specifics

to leave

離れる is typically used for longer term/greater distance separation. For example:

I will be very lonely if you leave Japan

あなた が日本 を 離れる と 私 は とても 寂しく なります anata ga nihon o hanareru to watashi ha totemo sabishiku narimasu

The policeman asked people to back off/leave

その警官 は 人々に 後ろに 下がって 離れる ように 言った sono keikan ha hitobito ni ushiro ni sagatte hanareru you ni itta Be sure to extinguish the fire before you leave (it)

離れる前に必ず火を消しなさい hanareru mae ni kanarazu hi o keshinasai

6 Kana

Japanese writing is termed kana, which is the combination of kanji, hiragana, and katakata.

Hiragana is used for native Japanese words and comprises all sounds in Japanese.

Katakana is used for new, non-native words (e.g. television) and also comprises all sounds in Japanese.

Kanji is the imported writing system from China, and is the bulk of what is written in Japanese.

Furigana is a combination of kanji and hiragana where the hiragana characters are shrunk and placed next to or above/below kanji. The purpose of the hiragana is to indicate pronunciation, e.g.

6.1 Pronunciation

Japanese is actually quite easy to speak, in comparison to English, because every vowel and consonant has (almost) the same pronunciation, i.e. there are no two ways to pronounce the vowel "a," there's only the one. Each hiragana sound takes up one unit of pronunciation time, e.g. \mathcal{Aht} would have the same amount of time to pronounce each letter.

6.1.1 Vowels

Vowel pronunciations are as follows:

- "A" Always the short "ah" sound, as made in "blah"
- "I" Always the long "e" sound, as made in "bee"
- "U" Always the long "u" sound, as made in "spoon" (except when preceded with an "o" sound)
- "E" Always the short "eh" sound, as made in "Meh"
- "O" Always the long "o" sound, as made in "oh"

Vowel sounds only change when two vowel sounds are put together, e.g. to make the long "A" sound, one must add an ι after a letter that ends in the "e" sound. "OI" and "UI" sound as expected, like "oink" and "gooey."

- "AI" Long "I" sound, as in "Plight"
- "EI" Long "A" sound, as in "freight train"
- "OU" A prolonged "O" sound, as in "ohhh"

Example: えいか (movie) sounds like "A-gah". はい sounds like "Hi."

If two vowels are next to each other (or if there is a \supset after an "o" sound), then the vowel is prolonged.

6.1.2 Dropped Vowels

The vowels "i" and "u" are sometimes dropped when placed between voiceless consonants {k, s, t, p, h} or when at the end of an utterance of a word. For example, 好きです would be pronounced "ski des" and suki desu

話して would be pronounced "hanashte."

6.1.3 On'yomi and Kun'yomi

Now, each kanji character has two or more pronunciations: on'yomi (Chinese) and kun'yomi (native Japanese). These two pronunciations were the combination of a spoken (Japanese) language that was adopting a written (Chinese) language. Sometimes, there are multiple onyomi or kunyomi pronunciations depending on the sounds next to the kanji (e.g. \square onyomi could be "hi" or "bi").

音読み (lit. "sound reading") is the Chinese pronunonyomi

ciation of a word and is usually the pronunciation of kanji when multiple kanji are together because the pronunciation originated from Chinese, e.g. 富士山.

訓読み is the native Japanese pronunciation of a kunyomi word and is usually used when the kanji is alone or (always when) combined with hiragana, e.g. \coprod_{vama} .

There are exceptions to these two general rules (e.g. kunyomi is used for 手紙), so it doesn't always work tegami this way. For example, kunyomi is usually used for Japanese names (both of people and locations), even though they're often written with multiple kanji.

6.2 Hiragana

Essentially, hiragana is used for particles, conjunctions, and other parts of sentences that aren't necessarily represented by kanji. Note that particles (which exist alone (not inside words) in order to connect words, not used to spell words) are spelled differently than are pronounced. For example, wa is written like \triangleright when it is inside/part of words, e.g. Watashi. However, wa is written like \bowtie for particles, e.g. $Anata\ wa$. The transformations are: $\{wa\rightarrow \bowtie \exists\ (ha), e/we\rightarrow \land,\ o/wo\rightarrow \nwarrow \}$. This means that, e.g., the sentence $watashi\ wa\ tabete\ imasu\ (I\ am\ eating)$ becomes 私は食べています instead of using \triangleright .

Diacritic marks - The basic syllables can be expanded upon by adding two short diagonal strokes (") to convert the letters $\{k\rightarrow g, s\rightarrow z, t\rightarrow d, h\rightarrow b\}$. Also, the consonant h changes to p when you add a small circle.

Diagraphs - Contractions of sounds into one syllable can be represented by placing a small character for either ya (\male), yu (\male), or yo (\male) after the original character for which you're trying to overwrite the sound. For example, chan will be a combination of chi and ya to result in the cha sound: \male $\male}$ \male \male $\male}$ \male $\male}$ \mal

Double Consonants

Finally, there is another small letter that looks like tsu called the sokuon, \supset . This is used to show repeated consonants. I'm pretty sure that, because all hiragana end in a vowel sound, that this only applies to the first consonant of the following hiragana character. This means that, for example, thapprox the thickness that the consonant of the following hiragana character. This means that, for example, <math>thapprox the thickness that the consonant of the following hiragana character. This means that, for example, <math>thapprox the thickness that the consonant of the following hiragana character. This means that, for example, <math>thapprox the thickness that the consonant of the following hiragana character. This means that, for example, <math>thapprox the thickness that the consonant of the following hiragana character. This means that, for example, <math>thapprox the thickness that the consonant of the following hiragana character. This means that, for example, <math>thapprox the thickness that the consonant of the following hiragana character. This means that, for example, <math>thapprox the thickness that the consonant of the following hiragana character. This means that, for example, <math>thapprox the third that the consonant of the following hiragana character. 6.3 Katakana Katakana is used for new words that didn't exist in Japan previously, including company names, scientific terms, and technology. Often, if you don't know the Japanese version of a word, you can say an English version of the word (e.g. ginkou for bank could be understood with banku instead). While hiragana is more curvy, katakana is more angular in nature.

Katakana has diacritics and conjunctions, too. It also uses the sokuon letter, γ , which is a small version of the letter for tsu, γ .

Katakana also allows other small letter combinations (e.g. "halloween" \to ハロウィーン where ウ is harowiin u and \prec is i) in order to allow for sounds that aren't in the Japanese alphabet.

Long vowels are written with the - symbol. When writing vertically, the - symbol is rotated 90 degrees, too
